WASTED TIME AND PAPER.

Between now and the meeting of Congress next December, over 600,000 public documents will have been turned over to the folding room of the House of Representatives to be delivered to ex-members of Congress.

The most extensive machinery for waste material by the government is found in the government printing office. It has been entirely converted from its original use.

It once confined itself to the public reports.

Now its business includes the incoherent ramblings of any crank, enthusiast or impracticable fellow who happens to be within the reach of one of the executive departments and can persuade one of its heads to get the matter printed as a public document. There are said to be now in print 70,000 copies of a new book on breeding horses, printed for the personal use of members of Congress, which no more belong in the category of public documents than would a work on yachting.

Yet these 70,000 books are to be sent free at the public expense to clubmen, horse jackies, liverymen, farmers or whoever has the remotest promise of a vote in him.

The government printing office is probably the largest establishment of its kind in the world and employs 2300 people. Here tons upon tons of matter are set up which it ture of $3,569,000 has been provided for,

and even this will doubtless have to be supplemented by a deficiency appropriation.

The reckless waste to which the Government printing office is devoted is becoming greater and greater scandal. An annual output of $3,421,646, largely for books that scarcely any sane man was ever known to read, is among the most conspicuous of the many methods by which the substance of the people is systematically squandered away. The public printing office should be restored to its legitimate purposes.

and at times inclined to be a trifle garrulous.

His ability, however, is unquestioned, and his power as an orator unexcelled on the Democratic side of the Senate chamber.

ARTHUR was naturally inclined to be controversial. Vast is the ideal of a combative politician. The little Missouriian would get up and fight a buzz-saw before breakfast and thank one for introducing him to the machine. Yet these two men, so different in their make-up, both physically and temperamentally, struck up a friendship which

Seemingly they had but one taste in common—they were both enthusiastic and accomplished anglers. They were inseparable companions upon their fishing trips, and more than one proposed expedition of President ARTHUR was postponed because Mr.

VEST could not make it convenient to accompany him.

The personal friendship of THOMAS B.

REID and the late SAMUEL J. RANDALL grew out of the respect which they held and manifested towards each other. It commenced with the mutual admiration which the two men felt for each other, and their widely different abilities and great steadiness of character. REID is apt to look upon the jovial side of life, although on occasions he can be as severe as any of our public men. RANDALL, on the other hand, was impressed with the responsibilities of public office so that he seldom had time to think of the lighter side of life. These men were more than friends, and during their service in the House together no word was spoken between them which was afterwards retreated.

The friendship of Senators THURMAN and EDWARDS is historic. They were more than friends—they were cronies. A similarity of tastes and abilities undoubtedly drew them together. They were inseparable companions in the Senate and old-timers will remember that ex-Senator Eaton of Connecticut was always counted when it was desired to make up a quorum of the committee on dark glassware which made its headquarters in the room of the committee on the judiciary.

In the present Senate, CAMERON of Pennsylvania and BUTLER of South Carolina have been chums for years. This is a case where the friendship of the father was transmitted to the son. Old

SIMON CAMERON was very friendly with

BUTLER during his term in the Senate, and when his son DON succeeded him the intimacy was transferred. They are almost always seen together in Washington and always pair upon political questions when a yes and nay vote is taken in the Senate. Quite as remarkable in its way is the friendship which has sprung up within the last two years between Representatives

O'NEIL and COGSWELL of Massachusetts.

There is no more question about the Republicanism of COGSWELL than there is about the Democracy of O'NEIL, but, although on opposite sides of the political fence, they have often helped each other within the past two years. Their friendship is genuine, and, although they agree to disagree upon politics, their personal relations are closer than those of any other two members of the Bay State delegation. Politics sometimes makes strange bed-fellows—agreeable ones, too, in such cases as this.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Italy's Protest Against New Orleans Lynching.

Sheriff's Deputies Shoot Hungarians in Pennsylvania.

The Alliance in New England—Notes From All Quarters.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Baron Fava presented to the State Department his recall by the Italian government, and has demanded his passport.

The department is greatly surprised, because it was wholly unexpected, and because the investigation into the New Orleans massacre is not completed.

The reason for the recall is "the king of Italy is dissatisfied with the progress of adjustment between the two countries in regard to the New Orleans massacre."

The answer from Washington being unsatisfactory, Italy instructed Baron Fava, on March 27, to press the two original demands.

The Italian government, and in the event of its failing to obtain satisfaction, to leave Washington on, after consigning the care of the legation at Washington to the charge of the first secretary.

This action upon the part of Baron Fava and his government is not regarded as a dramatic rupture, merely the first step towards such rupture.

The Italian minister at Rome, Mr. De Ruggieri, has been recalled, and the Italian government has been recalled.

Minister Fava, it is understood, has done much to pacify the Italian government, and has been recalled.

It is said that the president and his advisers are very much gratified over the receipt of the latest message from Italy.

"NEW YORK IS SAFE."

Champlain Points Out the Government's Great Mistake.

Philadelphia, April 4.—Charles H. Cramp, the head of the great shipbuilding firm here, says New York is in no danger from the Italian ironclads.

"They'll never come over here," he said, confidently.

"In the first place they can't carry coal enough to make such a voyage safely, and they could find no place here to coal."

"They carry very heavy guns, but, except for firing on a city, those guns are not effective much over a mile, and the crew could be easily destroyed by a few shells."

"The reason for the recall is 'the king of Italy is dissatisfied with the progress of adjustment between the two countries in regard to the New Orleans massacre.'"

PRIME REPORTS

Show Very Little Wheat Except what is Needed for Seed and Bread.

The general conditions of the country are still very unsettled; the ground now contains all the moisture it can stand, probably more than for many years, at this time.

The general opinion also seems to be that this excessive moisture in the winter wheat is going to result in a very largely the work of the Hessian fly.

No progress has been made this week in spring work.

Some clear weather for the past few days in Kansas and a continuation of the same may enable farmers to do a little more work.

Cattle,

A BRIGHT BRIDEGROOM.

Adapted from the German.
By WILLIAM DANA ORCUTT.

I had spent the evening with a friend who lived a little out of Hamburg. As my horse was in sight of home, I was obliged to leave him in the hands of the groom, and I rode for nearly 8 o'clock. I threw myself from my horse and entered the room. My father was at his waiting-desk, evidently waiting for me.

"Good morning, Henry," said he, without laying down his pen. "I am glad that you have come. I want you to make arrangements to go to France tomorrow at noon."

"To France, father?" I asked, in a low voice.
"You are to be married," he said.
"Married!" I cried in astonishment.
"Yes, a daughter of merchant Peterson of Bordeaux."

"But, father! Marry a girl whom I do not even know?"
"Certainly. It is a good family, and you can have your choice between three daughters."

"But suppose I don't like any of them?"
"No nonsense, Henry," said my father, sternly. "You are to start to-morrow."

"I could not but obey my father's order, so I found my way on board ship, with Hamburg gradually fading from my sight. Instead of going directly to the house of my father-in-law, I left the ship at a small port and went to Paris. I rented a furnished room, assumed the title of 'Lord Johnsbury,' and tumbled about for two weeks, seeing, hearing, and tasting what was to befall me."

I found the solitary which my father had destined for my fiancée had become loose, so I carried it to a jeweller's store to be repaired. While there, two ladies came in, and one of them, who was advanced in years and the other young and extremely beautiful. She examined a pair of earrings, but the price was too high, so she reluctantly handed them back. The young lady, however, demanded and begged her to accept them.

"You are very kind," she said, blushing, "and these jewels are very lovely; but they are not mine. I could not accept them from a stranger."

I urged in vain; and again expressing their thanks, they went away. To my delight, a few days later I met the ladies walking in the Tuilleries, with their usual escort, with earnest questions, requests and assurances, and after a long conversation, their caution seemed gradually to give way to sympathy. I took advantage of the opportunity to offer her the earrings, which she placed firmly on her finger before she could think of any objection.

"I am doing as great a wrong to listen to you as to accept this diamond ring," she said, and she turned away, leaving me to regret my folly, for I accept this diamond ring."

My happiness was to be rudely interrupted, for three days after this I suddenly learned that my father-in-law, M. Peterson, had died. I thought the matter over seriously, and finally decided to go to Bordeaux. As I could not appear before Mr. Peterson like a beggar, some bracelets, also intended for my fiancée, came to my mind, though they brought me only 80 francs.

The journey to Bordeaux passed quickly enough, and Mr. Peterson welcomed me warmly. In the course of our conversation he spoke of a letter from my father, and I started to offer an excuse for my delay in arriving, but he would not listen to it.

"My youngest daughters are away from home," said he, "and they do not want to see you, they shall be sent for."

We drank to the health of my future bride, and Mr. Peterson then showed me to my room.

"I am amazed when I saw Constance the next morning. I could find not a defect anywhere. The build, the figure, the complexion, belonged to no country but to the land of beauty; and the brown hair which fell over her white neck in luxuriant locks, and the smiling lips, which showed her relationship to France, were all perfect."

"I was struck by her arrival," said Mr. Peterson, and asked him for the hand of his daughter.

The old man led me to her, and placed her in my arms.

"She is my right," he cried. "Tomorrow, Constance, I shall write to your sisters, for they must be home for the wedding."

Constance, however, came in a few days, but Victoria still remained in her room. I had sufficient opportunity to become acquainted with the two sisters in their different ways of life. Constance was a charming woman, on a smaller scale than had been asportioned to Constance, but she was a woman of great spirit, and she was usually this apparent sadness left her, and the only light of her life was the light of her eyes, which she turned to me with a smile.

"I loved the beautiful Constance when I saw her, while the image of the charming Angelique faded from my mind."

One evening I set out for the summer-house, where, when the company was small, and when the weather was good, I had often been to the summer-house. I found the door locked, and I was about to go back, when I saw a light in the distance. I went to it, and found a young man sitting there, and he was looking at me with a smile.

"I am sorry, but you must wait," said Constance, "it cannot be changed."

"If you only wished to have it changed, Constance," I said, "I would do it."

"But I may not wish it, Mr. d'Argenteau," said my father, "and you must wait for the father's consent."

I had heard enough, and betook myself to the house by the same way I had come. The next morning, however, I found that the door was open, and I went in, and found that I had been waiting for nothing.

"I am sorry, but you must wait," said Constance, "it cannot be changed."
